Introduction

The main aim of this booklet is to exemplify standards for those teaching Cambridge IGCSE/IGCSE (9-1) History 0470 / 0977 and Cambridge O Level History 2147, and to show how different levels of candidates' performance (high, middle or low) relate to the subject's curriculum and assessment objectives.

In this booklet, candidate responses have been chosen from March 2020 scripts to exemplify a range of answers.

For each question, the response is annotated with a clear explanation of where and why marks were awarded or omitted. This is followed by examiner comments on how the answer could have been improved. In this way, it is possible for you to understand what candidates have done to gain their marks and what they could do to improve their answers. There is also a list of common mistakes candidates made in their answers, where relevant.

This document provides illustrative examples of candidate work with some examiner commentary. These help teachers assess the standard required to achieve marks beyond the guidance of the mark scheme. Therefore, in some circumstances, such as where exact answers are required, there will not be much comment.

The questions and mark schemes used here are available to download from the School Support Hub. These files are:

How to use this booklet

This booklet goes through the paper one question at a time, showing you the high-, middle- or low-level response for each question. The candidate answers are set in a table. In the left-hand column are the candidate answers, and in the right-hand column are the examiner comments.

This answer reached the top level in the mark scheme, showing knowledge of the crisis and how the source was useful. However, to achieve the top mark, the candidate should have made a more explicit statement in the crucial paragraph about how Source A was useful as evidence about the Cuban Missile Crisis. The answer implied this, rather than being explicit about usefulness.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- · Some responses wrote about the events in Source A without relating them to the Cuban Missile Crisis.
- Explanation of how Source A was useful to understanding the crisis was required for the highest level. However, many candidates simply made assertions that Source A was (or was not) useful.

Often candidates were not awarded marks because they misread or misinterpreted the questions.

They point out that the source is not directly about the Cuban Missile Crisis. However, the candidate explains that the tension between the two leaders and Kennedy's 'inexperience' help explain why Khrushchev planted missiles in Cuba. This demonstrates knowledge of the Crisis and how Source A is a useful source of evidence. Total mark awarded = 6 out of 7

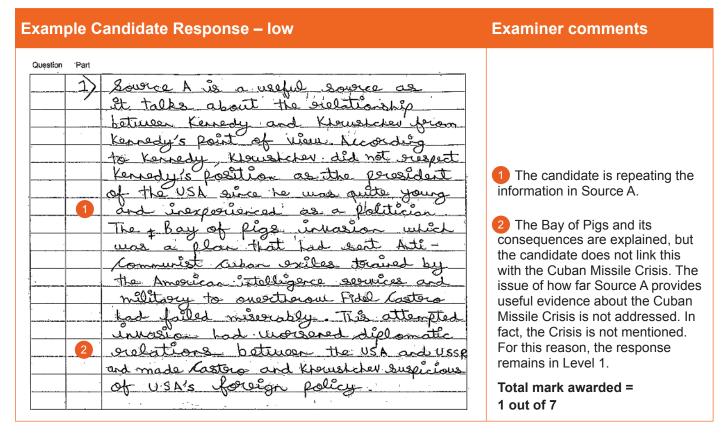

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer reached the top level in the mark scheme, showing knowledge of the Crisis and how the source was useful. However, to achieve the top mark, the candidate should have made a more explicit statement in the crucial paragraph about how Source A was useful as evidence about the Cuban Missile Crisis. The answer implied this, rather than being explicit about how it was useful.

Total mark awarded = 4 out of 7

How the candidate could have improved their answer

The candidate identified relevant information in Source A that could be used as evidence about the Cuban Missile Crisis but did not explain how it could be useful. To improve the response, the candidate could have selected a development in the Crisis, such as Khrushchev placing missiles in Cuba. If the response explained how Khrushchev thought he could get away with this, because he thought Kennedy was weak and inexperienced, then Level 5 of the mark scheme would have been reached. This crucial move depended on the candidate selecting an aspect of the Crisis and demonstrating how Source A helped to explain it.

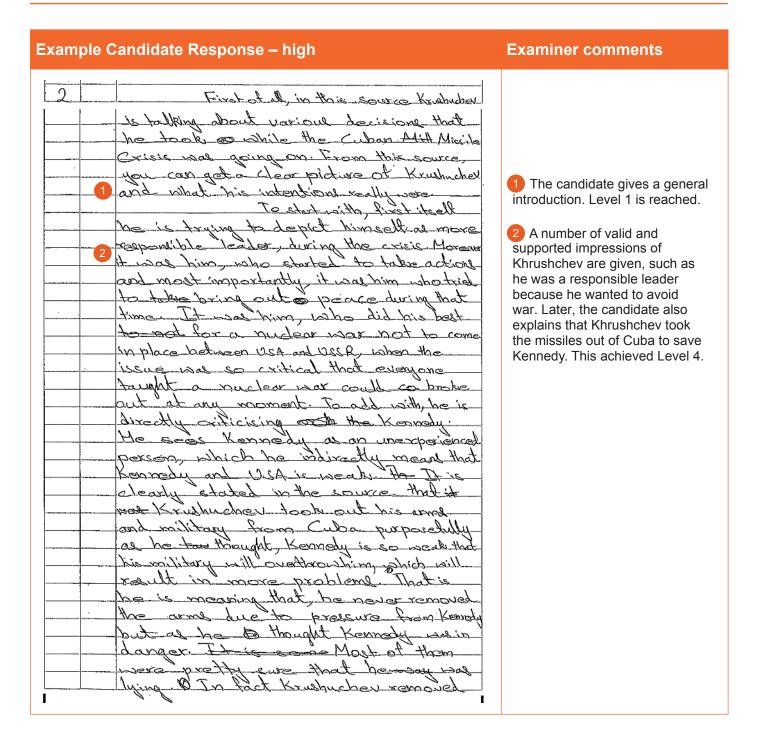

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This response needed to focus more on the Cuban Missile Crisis and how far Source A provided evidence about it. The answer was related to the Bay of Pigs invasion rather than the Cuban Missile Crisis. There were some opportunities in the response for the candidate to develop relevant points. For instance, after making the point that Khrushchev did not respect Kennedy, the candidate could have suggested that this helped to explain why Khrushchev acted as he did during the Crisis. In the same way, the point about the way the Bay of Pigs made Khrushchev and Castro suspicious of US policy, could have been used to explain why missiles were placed on Cuba.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- Some candidates wrote about the events in Source A without relating them to the Cuban Missile Crisis.
- Explanation of how Source A was useful to understanding the crisis was required for the highest level, however, many candidates simply made assertions that Source A was (or was not) useful.
- Many focused on what the source said without selecting an aspect of the Crisis that could have been better understood through use of Source A.

- The candidate states that Khrushchev really moved the missiles because of US pressure. This does not answer the question. The idea that Khrushchev was a liar cannot be inferred from the source.
- 4) The response reaches Level 5. There is a clear statement that Khrushchev was trying to justify his actions and that he wanted the Soviet people to see him as the victor in the Crisis. Later, it is stated that 'he always tried to raise his own position'. Although the candidate does not explicitly state that these are negative impressions, they raise the answer into Level 5. The response gets close to Level 6 as it shows that Khrushchev was trying to ensure that the Soviet public should never feel that he had accepted the US demands and that he wanted to improve his own position in the USSR. The response does not directly state that Khrushchev was criticised at the time. To reach Level 6, the candidate needed to be more explicit about this.

Total mark awarded = 6 out of 7

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer achieved Level 5 by focusing on valid negative impressions. To be awarded Level 6, the response needed to be clearer about the need for Khrushchev to rescue his reputation. There was not enough specific contextual knowledge about his position after the Crisis. The candidate needed to explain that the common perception at the time was that Khrushchev had given in to Kennedy, or about the fact that he fell from power within two years of the events.

However, the candidate needs to use this to make a negative inference about Khrushchev. The conclusion in the final sentence reinforces positive impressions. Total mark awarded = 4 out of 7

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer made several valid supported impressions to achieve Level 4. The candidate was aware that Khrushchev was making positive impressions of himself and could have improved their answer if they had used this to suggest that it showed us that Khrushchev was boastful or self-promoting. This would have raised the answer into Level 5.

Due to this, I feel that a few of the obove statements develop tells as us what kind of character Khowshchen was.

Examiner comments

- 1 The candidate attempts to address 'impressions'. However, the attempt 'not someone who would give up easily and was not someone who could be stopped or silenced' does not work well with Source B. It is as much a description as an inference and there is nothing in Source B that directly supports it. However, it is an attempt to draw an inference and is not completely wrong. It can be allowed as Level 2 a valid inference (just) but not convincing about Khrushchev.
- 2 The candidate repeats what is in the source and makes no inferences about Khrushchev. The candidate does not use this information to support an inference.

Total mark awarded = 2 out of 7

How the candidate could have improved their answer

The question required candidates to make inferences about Khrushchev that could be supported from Source B. The two attempts at the beginning of this answer were marginal in terms of being justified by Source B. More obvious inferences would have been that he was responsible, understanding or in charge. These inferences needed to be supported from the source. For example, a valid, supported inference would have been, 'The impression of Khrushchev is that he was in charge of events during the Crisis. This is shown by the fact that that he says he started the exchange with Kennedy and was at the centre of the action'.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- Many responses took surface information from the source rather than making inferences.
- · Some tried to make inferences about Khrushchev which could not be supported using the source content.
- A few responses made inferences about Kennedy rather than Khrushchev.
- Some candidates made valid inferences but did not support them from Source B.
- · Many did not recognise that Source B shows Khrushchev in a negative way.
- Few responses explained their answers using their contextual knowledge of Khrushchev's position after the Crisis.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer was awarded Level 4 because it explained the main message of the cartoon. To reach the top level in the mark scheme, the candidate needed to explain the point of view of the cartoonist. The question asked about the 'cartoonist's message'. This meant going further than the big message and explaining what the cartoonist thought of the situation they represented. In this cartoon, the cartoonist approved of the fact that the US had the upper-hand in the Cuban Missile Crisis. This could be seen by the way that characters were portrayed, for instance, Khrushchev and Castro were shown in rather foolish poses compared to the calm authority of Kennedy.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

The candidate identified and supported some valid sub-messages. To improve this answer, the candidate needed to explain the big message of the cartoon. The big message was the main point that the cartoonist wanted to make. Here, the big message was that the US had the upper-hand in the Crisis, or that the US had taken control of the Crisis. There were two elements to this big message: (i) it must relate directly to the Cuban Missile Crisis, and (ii) it must show an understanding that the US had taken control of the Crisis. This answer was close to this at the end where it stated that the US was strong, but did not go far enough in recognising both of the elements explained above.

- This answer is weakened by the candidate relying on contextual knowledge rather than trying to interpret what the cartoonist wants to say. Attempts to identify messages are based on misinterpretations of the cartoon. For instance, Khrushchev had better well-quipped arms is not a valid message of this cartoon.
- 2 Much of this answer is about the events of the Cuban Missile Crisis rather than the cartoon. There is an attempt to return to the cartoon at the end of the answer but 'alarm' is not the right word for a confident looking Kennedy. This answer is in Level 1. It contains misinterpretations and does not identify valid submessages.

Total mark awarded = 1 out of 8

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer contained some contextual knowledge of the Cuban Missile Crisis but misinterpreted the cartoon by seeing Khrushchev as 'better equipped' and Kennedy as 'alarmed'. The candidate needed to focus more carefully on the cartoon and its messages. For example, the cartoon suggested that the US was strong, the situation was tense and the US would retaliate.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- Some responses were focused on their knowledge of the Cuban Missile Crisis rather than on interpreting the cartoon.
- A number of responses were based on surface descriptions of the cartoon rather than making inferences and explaining messages.
- Some identified relevant sub-messages from the cartoon but did not support these with details from the cartoon.
- A few answers were distracted by minor details in the cartoon, such as the fish, instead of being focused on explaining the big message.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer slowly built towards Level 5 and became secure in the final paragraph. Level 5 could have been reached more quickly if the candidate compared the big messages of the two sources earlier in the response. Instead, the candidate explained Source D first, and then moved on to Source E. The big message of each source was clearly understood but the candidate was hesitant about making an explicit comparison, and this only came at the end.

The answer then continued to explain that Source E showed the USA (or Kennedy) was getting the upper hand in the Crisis. This was a valid reading of Source E, however, the candidate's claim that Source D showed the two nations as equals was not correct. Source D mentioned that Khrushchev had just blinked and this suggested that he was showing weakness. As a result, this attempt by the candidate to reach Level 5 by comparing big messages was not successful.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

At the end of the response, the candidate made a valid interpretation of one source. Source E suggested that Khrushchev was the weaker of the two. One way of improving this answer would have been to compare this point about Khrushchev with what Source D suggested about him. This could have led the candidate to realise that Source D agreed about Khrushchev being weaker (the remark that Khrushchev had just blinked). This would have been a Level 5 answer with the big messages compared. Being more precise in the opening paragraph would also have improved this answer. The candidate claimed that the two men were pursuing a personal agenda, which was not what the cartoons showed. However, a statement that both sources showed that the Crisis was a personal struggle between the two men would have raised the answer to Level 4 as a comparison of sub-messages.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- Some responses interpreted both sources separately but did not compare them.
- A number of answers focused on minor details in the sources without considering the main point being made by both authors.
- Some candidates misinterpreted Source D and therefore were unable to reach valid points of comparison.

Option B - Question 5

How the candidate could have improved their answer

The candidate evaluated Source G and used this to state that it did not make Source F surprising. This placed the answer in Level 5. The candidate also needed to evaluate Source F. This could have been achieved by focusing on Kennedy's purpose. In his speech, Kennedy was trying to win the support of the American people for his actions over Cuba. This gave another reason why Source G did not make Source F surprising because Kennedy's speech made perfect sense in terms of his purpose at the time.

- 1 The candidate provides a good start to the answer. It reaches Level 3 by explaining how the two sources disagree and using this as a reason why Source G makes Source F surprising.
- The candidate attempts to evaluate the two sources. The basis for this evaluation is that Source G was written with hindsight while Source F was written at the time and was a natural reaction. These attempts at evaluation do not consider the purpose or motive of the sources (for example) and are not sufficiently developed for Levels 5 or 6.
- 3 The candidate makes another attempt at evaluation. However, the argument that Source G's claim that the USSR would be helpless is flawed because Kennedy called off an airstrike on Cuba, does not work. The answer remains in Level 3.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer started in Level 3 with an explanation of how the sources disagreed, which means Source G makes Source F surprising. Several attempts were made to evaluate the sources to demonstrate that Source G did not make Source F surprising. These did not work. The candidate understood what was required, but was unable to carry out the necessary evaluation. A more effective way of evaluating the sources would have been to focus on purpose. For instance, the author of Source G, as a supporter of Batista, was trying to show that the US could have easily destroyed the missiles and invaded and Cuba. The fact that he had this purpose meant that Source G could not be trusted, and therefore could not be used to make Source F surprising.

1 The candidate makes no mention of the sources yet. Source F is not discussed and the response is not addressing the question. There is no valid response in the first paragraph.

- 2 Source F is mentioned, but only in passing. The candidate writes about Khrushchev's intentions rather than about the sources. This response has not yet reached Level 1.
- 3 The candidate makes an attempt to compare/link the two sources but no valid point is made. The answer fits the Level 1 descriptor - 'Writes about the sources but does not address the question'.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer made limited use of the sources and the question was not addressed. The first step the candidate needed to make to improve their answer was to focus on what the two sources were saying. The next step was to find an agreement or disagreement between the two sources and use this as a reason for Source G either making or not making Source F surprising.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- A small number of responses compared and even evaluated the sources, but did not draw a conclusion about whether or not Source G made Source F surprising.
- Some responses made assertions about surprise without support or explanation.
- Some responses were limited because they were based on the assumption that finding a difference or agreement between the sources provided the full answer to the question.
- Where responses attempted evaluation, this was often less effective because it was based on the provenance of sources rather than on the purpose of their authors.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This was a very good answer with 11 marks out of 12 being awarded. Source content was used to support and challenge the statement in the question and Source A was evaluated effectively. To achieve 12 marks, the candidate needed another satisfactory evaluation of a source. A weak attempt was made to evaluate Source B. This would have been improved if the candidate had considered Khrushchev's purpose in context. For instance, it was possible to argue that 'This source cannot be trusted because it was written later when Khrushchev was trying to rescue his reputation after he had been toppled from power in the USSR because of his handling of the Cuban Missile Crisis'.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This answer attempted to explain how some sources supported the statement and others did not. Much of the answer was focused on support. The answer was placed at the bottom of Level 2. To improve this answer, the candidate needed to explain more thoroughly how sources support or do not support the statement. It was necessary to use the source content to support the point being made. For example, 'Source F does not support this statement. This is because Kennedy focuses on the threat the missiles in Cuba pose to American cities. He is interested in the threat to the country and people of the USA and does not mention any personal rivalry with Khrushchev'.

How the candidate could have improved their answer

This candidate addressed the statement about the Cuban Missile Crisis being about personal rivalry but did not make valid use of the sources. They needed to use the content of sources to explain whether they supported the statement or not. For instance, Source E supports the statement and shows that the Crisis was really about personal rivalry. It shows Khrushchev and Kennedy face to face having an arm wrestle. This strongly implies that the Crisis was a trial of strength and determination between the two men.

Common mistakes candidates made in this question

- Some answers were not based on the sources and were written from contextual knowledge instead.
- Many responses made assertions that the sources supported or challenged the statement but lacked an explanation which was based on the content of the source.
- A small number of responses analysed the sources without making it clear whether or not they supported the statement.
- Some misread the statement and, as a result, used the sources to test a slightly different statement from the one given in Question 6.
- There were a number of one-sided answers which only explained how sources supported the statement or only explained how they did not support the statement.
- In some cases, responses did not make it clear which source they were using by referring to the source letter or provenance.
